Seminarians Receive Aid

When expenses go up, hopefully, income does, too.

Unfortunately, for seminarians, that rarely happens.

Students who go immediately from college to seminary often are faced with a significant debt load from college—then need more loans as they begin seminary.

“Second career” candidates often give up full-time employment to start class work, leaving them with less income and higher expenses.

Unforeseen expenses like medical bills or car repairs can be devastating.

Thanks to you, the Northeastern Pennsylvania Synod has been able to provide loans of $3,000 a year to students who show financial need. Loans are forgiven after students have served for three years as pastors, AiMs, deaconesses, or diaconal ministers.

Last year, the synod received special gifts to the student education fund totaling $12,983 from 16 congregations and 11 pastors.

Most seminarians need financial support. Thanks to you and your gifts to the student education fund, they receive the help they need—and you receive the gift of rostered leadership.
